Blockchain originated just over 10 years ago. Since then, virtual assets have become widely available and have started to be used as payment products. However, without established regulation and oversight, the sector is often still referred to as the "wild west" of the finance industry.

Virtual assets have many potential benefits. They could make payments easier, faster, and cheaper; and provide alternative methods for those without access to regular financial products. But without proper regulation, they risk becoming a virtual safe haven for the financial transactions of criminals and terrorists. These gaps in the global regulatory system have created significant loopholes for criminals and terrorists to abuse. The technology behind virtual assets is fast-moving. Future developments should not create loopholes that terrorists and criminals can exploit.

In 2021, cryptocurrency crimes and the scale of losses in Hong Kong soared to record levels in the first six months of this year, with one victim conned out of HK$124 million (US$15.9 million).

Executive Workshop The Art of Winning Requests for Proposals (RFP) in Financial Services

Programme Code: FINA9364

Application Code: 2070-3369NW

Competition of service providers in financial services has never been more brutal. Executives of financial service providers feel increasingly commoditised as clients view themselves and their competitors as much the same. Their win rate in bidding request for proposals (RFP) may be on the decrease. One of the best ways to win RFP is to make sure they understand how and why their clients determine one competitor over another and how outstanding providers align and win the RFP without competing on fees only. How to accelerate the message of service providers with difference, preference and proof is important in winning RFP in financial services.
